This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: ...the foundations of two stations. Later the chain of trading posts would be lengthened eastward. The man to whom had been entrusted the management of the new district was Mr. Christy Harding, an Englishman born in India but long identified with trading in the far north. When I first went down the Mackenzie River on my way to the Arctic in 1906 he was in charge of Fort Resolution on the south shore of Great Slave Lake, and I saw him there again on my second journey in 1908. His wife, who was with him now, was born at Fort Simpson, only about two hundred and fifty miles south of the arctic circle, the daughter of Julian S. Camsell, who for a long time was in charge of all the Company's posts in the arctic and sub-arctic section of the Mackenzie valley. Our compulsory wait while the bottom of the Ruby was being uncovered I employed in engaging several Eskimo families. The men we needed, though experienced white men would have been as good if available; the women as seamstresses are priceless. Our field clothing is almost entirely made of the skins of seals and caribou and in securing these the best white hunters are usually better than the best Eskimos. But the preparation of the skins is tedious to any one but Eskimo women brought up to the idea that it is their proper work, while such skill as theirs with the needle is acquired only by years and generations of practice. All their needlework is excellent and their waterproof seams are probably the only really waterproof sewing in the world. Our bootmakers do not conceive that a seam may be in itself waterproof, and attain their ends by rubbing or soaking some sort of greese into the needleholes. Among the Eskimos no seam is considered passable unless it is waterproof without greasing. If a good seamstress sees...
