Property Rights and Economic Development. Land and Natural Resources in Southeast Asia and Oceania Van, Toon van Meijl, Franz von Benda-Beckmann

The assumption that a positive relationship exists between standardized property rights and economic development is upheld widely in most Southeast Asian and Pacific societies. Using an interdisciplinary approach and case studies, these papers assess the economic impact of standardized property rights on the land and natural resources in Southeast Asia and Oceania. Anthropological and sociological analyses of the relationship indicate a positive correlation may be difficult to sustain.
