Hunting the Lawless Hugh M. Worcester

From dust jacket notes: "This is Hugh Worcester's own story of more than 30 years devoted to wildlife conservation. For nearly 20 years he directed his main efforts to the difficult and perilous task of breaking up the organized gangs of market hunters who with their allies, the big city restaurants, were illegally killing and selling such enormous numbers of wild ducks and geese as to threaten their extinction on the Pacific Flyway. Most of his book deals with this activity. After a difficult boyhood in the rugged regions of North Dakota and Montana, the author served two enlistments in the U.S. Navy. Mustered out at the end of World War I, a year or so later he began his career in wildlife conservation as an Idaho Game Warden. His distinguished work there led to a request from the Washington Fish and Game authorities to go to Pullman where besides serving as Game Warden he maintained a pheasant farm on the college campus for students interested in conservation. Here again his work was outstanding, and he was called by the Federal Government to take charge of and develop its Wildlife Refuge at Tule Lake, California. It was while serving there that the author was asked by Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson, Regional Director of U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, to go to Berkeley, California, and take complete charge of law enforcement in the California-Nevada area, as Game Management Agent. This was in 1934, and from then until his retirement, 20 years later, his primary efforts were directed to breaking up the organized gangs preying upon our priceless wildlife...."
